Haryana in Olympic

Haryana has been India's medal factory in the last few editions of the world's biggest sporting extravaganza. Haryana has always been at the foremost in sports achievements in the past decade. From the Indian contingent of 81 athletes at the 2012 London Olympic, 18 hailed from Haryana including all the top boxers and wrestlers. This despite the fact that the state has a share of only about 2% of the national population. Apart from Mary Kom and Vijay Kumar, the other four medal winners had some connection with one of the most economically developed regions in South Asia. One of the most important disciplines for India in this edition of the Olympic is wrestling. And can you believe it six out of eight wrestlers are from Haryana only. The captain of Indianmen's hockey team Sardar Singh is from Haryana.

The women in Haryana are not too far behind the men. In a state where female feticide is still a major issue, the Sania Nehwal, Rani Rampal and Phogat sisters give hope about the end of the darkness. The Indian women's hockey team qualified this year after a gap of 36 years. Mostly players in this team are from Haryana. There is Geeta Phogat, who became the first Olympic women wrestler of India. There is Discus thrower Krishna Poonia who went on to reach the final round of track and field events in the London Olympic games. Sakshi Malik and Babita Phogat had participated in Rio Olympic games and Sakshi Malik won the bronze medal in wrestling.
